

Half the Rubric Has No Mission

Where the camp's content and the platform's journey part company — and the three changes that close it.

The sequencing is right — teaching order was bent so missions unlock in order. The problem is content, not order. Four of the seven Bazaar criteria, 50% of the score, measure work no mission has a field for; two missions ask for work the camp has not taught yet; and two hand students a different tool from the one they were given in class three hours earlier.

DAY	WHAT THE CAMP PRODUCES	MISSIONS	WHERE CONTENT AND JOURNEY PART
1	Impact × Frequency matrix, persona	01–03	We call the same matrix Importance /Frequency. Mission 01 also asks what solutions exist and their limits — competitor work the camp never teaches.
2	Problem statement, solution on value × effort , value proposition, test plan	04–06, 07	Mission 05 scores solutions on value × impact — a different axis, the same evening. Mission 06 wants 3–5 product features; product work is Day 4.
3	Unit cost, price, margin, break-even	08	No mission records finance. The canvas has one Revenue Streams box. Four hours and 15% of the rubric land nowhere.
4	Prototype, user test, brand kit	09–10	No mission records branding — an hour of Day 4 and 10% of the rubric. Mission 09 asks what technology stack was used, of students building in cardboard.
5	Pitch deck, rehearsed pitch, Q&A	catch-up only	No mission records the pitch. A whole day and 25% of the rubric: the largest gap in the map.

- 01 Add the two missions the camp already does the work for Costs and Pricing after mission 08, Brand and Pitch after 10. Both fill from artefacts made in class, so neither adds homework, and together they take the unrecorded half of the rubric to nothing.
- 02 Change mission 05 from value × impact to value × effort
The camp's axis is the better one: a fifteen-year-old can estimate effort and cannot estimate impact before collecting the evidence.
- 03 Move the competitor questions from mission 01 to mission 04
On night one they are guesswork. After the interviews they are answerable, and the camp has taught something to answer them with.

Also: seven of the ten mission titles in the pack are not what a student sees on screen, and the pack's are clearer. Missions 11–15 are never taught, and two do not fit this age as written. Checked against the Entrepreneurship Camp Learner Journey pack, September 2026, and our own mission and question list; the 50% is the published Bazaar weights for finance, brand, pitch and Q&A.
